Verbal Description: The majority of the piece is very flat with one edge (see right side of right-hand fig. below) slightly curving inward.

The attachment projects upward 3-3.5 cm from the base. The joint between the attachment and base is smoothed which shows that this circular attachment pierced through the base piece. It is indeterminate whether the base piece was a wall, base, or lid.

The three circular pieces were applied. The centers are hollowed out. The piece on the far right is smoothed but the first and third pieces have rough edges. It looks as if there may have been another circular piece before the first and one between the first and second.

It seems feasible that this is a foot because of the possible five attachments, decreasing in size from left to right. However, the piece that would be the foot rises at nearly 90° angle and is very round - unlike a human foot.
